CASE STUDY/LETTER OF REFERENCE:

Why Professional Website Optimization & Customer-Focused Content Writing Matters

Advice from a small business owner who successfully competes in the huge outdoor outfitter market

*By Pam Foster, Certified SEO Copywriter, Web Content Consultant
ContentClear Marketing www.contentclear.com*

In 2009, Gene Baker asked me to advise him on the lagging performance of his newly updated web site. Some of the products that dominate search engine rankings for him were not attracting as many buying customers as they used to.

Looking at the site, I found that his most popular brand category pages were missing inviting, unique content that differentiated Baker's as "the choice" for customers — why they should buy these brands from his site. Instead, the brand pages simply showed photos of each product offered, with links to the specific product detail pages.

Working with Gene, I mapped out a strategy to bring in keyword-rich, inviting headlines, subheads and page titles to each brand page. I conducted keyword research and searches to identify the most relevant keywords for each brand, while also looking at high demand/low supply numbers.

Next, I identified the top 3 "winning" keyphrases (relevance, high demand and low supply) for each brand page, and set about creating content that differentiated Baker's from all the other sites carrying those same brands.

My content strategy was to maintain Baker's terrific search rankings (via the ethical use of keywords) while also answering the question for prospects: "Why buy these brands from Baker's when I can buy them from several other sites?"

Once my work was done and the new content started showing up in search results, Gene was pleased to report that his sales started trending upward again, especially for certain competitive brands. Hooray!

Here's a personal letter of reference that he provided to me as a result:

"June 2, 2010

My name is Gene Baker, owner of Baker's Shoes & Clothing in Eugene, Oregon. I have owned this business since 1985, taking over the family operation of outdoor footwear and clothing. I grew up in Oregon and the outdoor recreational gear we sell is an important part of life in the Northwest.

I met Pam through a web designer who rebuilt our site in the Fall of 2009. We had a massive overhaul of our 10-year old site back then, and the missing element was the informative and creative content that Pam provides.

I have learned through many experiences of using web design, content and web marketing that you get what you pay for. What you want is results.

With Pam's expertise and search engine optimization, you will get results.

If you can't differentiate yourself in the mass market of the Internet, your website will get lost and lose relevance.

Pam's precise use of words and content amazes me.

Her research for the exact search terms, optimizing content and looking for those little differences will set your site apart.

Pam's work will show results over time.

As your site grows, its relevance will grow with it because of Pam's expertise.

She brings a lot of credibility to the table with her years at LL Bean.

I continue to work with Pam to this day and I appreciate all that Pam has done for me. She is a down to earth, easy to talk to person.

Her heart is always in the right place and her goal of separating your site from the competition is always clear. Or as I should say, 'Content Clear.'

Thank you, Pam."
